Regent's Park: The Broad Walk. The successor of Marylebone Park, a royal hunting-ground until Cromwell's day, was laid out by Nash in 1812 and named after the Prince Regent (afterward George IV., 1820-1830). From South to North runs the Broad Walk leading straight to the Zoological Gardens. Fine trees, grassy expanses sacred to games, flower-gardens, make the Park delightful. Many varieties of wild birds are here and nimble squirrels remarkably tame.
